Dear Christina Gold:

It shouldn't cost so much to express love for one's family.

But that's what Western Union does with its high fees and predatory rates that cost working families billions of dollars each year—money that otherwise would have gone to support their children's education, provide healthcare to ailing grandparents, and help combat poverty in communities.

I would like to believe that Western Union cares as much about the welfare of families as they do about making money from them.

I urge you to adopt the Transnational Community Benefits Agreement proposed by TIGRA immediately.

Sincerely,

Please
